I. In general.

1. The quality of being equal or fair; fairness, impartiality; evenhanded dealing.

The L. æquitas was somewhat influenced in meaning by being adopted as the ordinary rendering of Gr. ἐπιείκεια (see EPIKY), which meant reasonableness and moderation in the exercise of one's rights, and the disposition to avoid insisting on them too rigorously. An approach to this sense is found in many of the earlier Eng. examples.

II. In Jurisprudence.

3. The recourse to general principles of justice (the naturalis æquitas of Roman jurists) to correct or supplement the provisions of the law. equity of a statute: the construction of a statute according to its reason and spirit, so as to make it apply to cases for which it does not expressly provide.

4. a. In England (hence in Ireland and the United States), the distinctive name of a system of law existing side by side with the common and statute law (together called 'law' in a narrower sense), and superseding these, when they conflict with it.

The original notion was that of sense 3, a decision 'in equity' being understood to be one given in accordance with natural justice, in a case for which the law did not provide adequate remedy, or in which its operation would have been unfair. These decisions, however, were taken as precedents, and thus 'equity' early became an organized system of rules, not less definite and rigid than those of 'law'; though the older notion long continued to survive in the language of legal writers, and to some extent to influence the practice of equity judges. In England, equity was formerly administered by a special class of tribunals, of which the Court of Chancery was chief; but since 1873 all the branches of the High Court administer both 'law' and 'equity', it being provided that where the two differ, the rules of equity are to be followed. Nevertheless, the class of cases formerly dealt with by the Court of Chancery are still reserved to the Chancery Division of the High Court.

1591 LAMBARDE Arch (1635) 46 And likewise in his Court of Equitie he doth.. cancell and shut up the rigour of the generall Law. Ibid. 58 The Iustices should informe him [the King] of the Law, and the Chancellor of Equitie. 1745 *De Foe's Eng. 1861 MAINE Anc. Law ii. (1870) 28 What I call equity.. any body of rules existing by the side of the original civil law, founded on distinct principles and claiming incidentally to supersede the civil law in virtue of a superior sanctity inherent in those principles.

-er, suffix[1], ME. -er(e, -ar(e, OE. -ȩre (ONorthumb. often -are), forming sbs., represents WGer. -âri:—OTeut. -ârjo-z, whence OHG. -âri (MHG. -ære, mod.G. -er), and (with change of declension) ON. -ari (OIcel. -are, later -ari, Sw. -are, Da. -ere). The related and functionally equivalent WGer. -ari (OS. -eri, Du. -er, OHG. -ari, -eri, MHG. -ere) = Goth. -areis:—OTeut. type -arjo-z (which by phonetic law would prob. have become in OE. -erȝe, in ON. -ri) has in OE. coalesced with this. The phonological relation between OTeut. -ǎrjo-z and L. -ārius is obscure: Möller Zur ahd. Alliterationspoesie (1888) 142 argues that -ârjo-z originated in words adopted from Lat. words in -ārius, and that -ǎrjo-z is either an accentual variant of this, or (possibly) represents an OAryan type -orios.

1. In its original use the suffix -ǎrjo-z was added (like L. -ārius) to sbs., forming derivative sbs. with the general sense 'a man who has to do with (the thing denoted by the primary sb.)', and hence chiefly serving to designate persons according to their profession or occupation; e.g. Goth. dômareis, ON. dômari judge, f. OTeut. dômo-* judgement, DOOM; Goth. bôkareis, OE. bócere scribe, f. OTeut. bôk-* BOOK; OHG. sangâri (mod.G. sänger), ON. sǫngare, OE. sangere (ME. songere) singer, f. OTeut. sangwo-* SONG. Of this type there are many specially Eng. formations, e.g. hatter, slater, tinner. Where the primary sb. ends in -w:—ME. -ȝe:—OE. -ȝe, the suffix assumes the form -yer (in ME. -iere, -yere), as in bowyer, lawyer, sawyer; and, either after the analogy of these or by assimilation to Fr. derivatives in -ier (see -ER[2]), it appears as -IER in certain other words of ME. date, as brazier, clothier, collier, glazier, grazier, hosier. The Eng. words of this formation not referring to profession or employment are comparatively few: examples are bencher, cottager, outsider, villager. With these may be compared a class of words chiefly belonging to mod. colloquial language, and denoting things or actions, as header, back-hander, fiver, out-and-outer, three-decker. A special use of the suffix, common to the mod. Teut. langs. though scarcely to be found in their older stages, is its addition to names of places or countries to express the sense 'a native of', 'a resident in', e.g. Londoner, New Yorker, Icelander. With similar notion, derivatives in -er have been formed upon certain Eng. adjs. indicating place of origin or residence, as foreigner, northerner, southerner.

2. Most of the sbs. which in early Teutonic gave rise to derivatives in -ǎrjo-z, also gave rise to wk. vbs. in -jan or -ôjan, to which the former stood related in sense as agent-nouns; thus Goth. dômareis judge, served as the agent-noun to dômjan to judge. Hence, by analogy, the suffix came to be regarded as a formative of agent-nouns, and with this function it was added to verbal bases both of the weak and the strong conjugation. Many derivatives of this type existed already in OE., and many more have been added in the later periods of the language. In mod.Eng. they may be formed on all vbs., excepting some of those which have agent-nouns ending in -or, and some others for which this function is served by sbs. of different formation (e.g. correspond, correspondent). The distinction between -er and -or as the ending of agent-nouns is purely historical and orthographical; in the present spoken language they are alike pronounced (ə(r)), except that in law terms and in certain Lat. words not fully naturalized, -or is still sounded (ɔ:(r)). In received spelling, the choice between the two forms is often capricious, or determined by other than historical reasons. The agent-nouns belonging to vbs. f. L. ppl. stems, and to those formed with -ATE, usually end in -or, being partly adoptions from Lat., and partly assimilated to Lat. analogies. But when the sense is purely agential, without any added notion such as that of office, trade, or profession, function, etc., -er is often used; cf. inspector, respecter; projector, rejecter. In a few instances both forms of the agent-noun are still in current use, commonly without any corresponding distinction in sense, as asserter, assertor; sometimes with a distinction of technical and general sense (often however neglected) as accepter, acceptor. The Romanic -our, -or of agent-nouns has been in most cases replaced by -er where the related vb. exists in Eng.; exceptions are governor, conjuror (for which -er also occurs); in special sense we have saviour, but in purely agential sense saver. In liar, beggar, the spelling -ar is a survival of the occasional ME. variant -ar(e. The agent-nouns in -er normally denote personal agents (originally, only male persons, though this restriction is now wholly obsolete); many of them, however, may be used to denote material agents, and hence also mere instruments; e.g. blotter, cutter, poker, roller, etc.

3. In several instances -er has the appearance of being an unmeaning extension of earlier words ending in -er denoting trades or offices. Most of these words are of Fr. origin, as caterer, †cytolerer (= CITOLER), †fermerer, †feuterer, fruiterer, poulterer; an analogous case in a native word is upholsterer. The real formation of these words is obscure: some are prob. from vbs., while in other cases formation on words in -ery may be conjectured.

4. After the analogy of ASTROLOGER, ASTRONOMER (q.v.), the suffix -er is used to form sbs. serving as adaptations of L. types in -logus, -graphus; e.g. chronologer, philologer, †theologer; biographer, geographer, orthographer.

Philosopher (in Chaucer and Gower always philo'sophre) is perh. not a formation of this kind, as the r may be merely excrescent. In chorister, sophister, barrister (cf. ME. legistre) the -er is not a suffix, but results from an AF. substitution of -istre for -iste, perh. on the analogy of ministre.

-er[2], suffix, of various origin, occurring in sbs. and adjs. adopted from OF.

1. ME. -er, repr. OF. -er:—L. -ārem, -ar: see -AR. Nearly all the ME. words ending in -er of this origin have been refashioned after Lat., so that the suffix is now written -ar: see examples under -AR. The older form of the suffix is retained in sampler.

2. ME. -er, a. AF. -er (OF. -ier) in sbs. which descend from L. forms in -ārius, -ārium (see -ARY), or which were formed in Fr. after the analogy of those so descending. Where the L. type of the suffix is the masc. -ārius, it has usually the sense 'a person connected with', and the words are designations of office or occupation, as butler, carpenter, draper, grocer, mariner, officer. (So also in a few ME. adoptions of OF. fem. sbs. in -iere:—L. -āria, as chamberer, lavender.) Where the suffix represents the L. neuter -ārium, the sense is 'a thing connected with', 'a receptacle for', as in antiphoner, danger, garner, etc.

3. In mod.Eng. -er appears as a casual representative of various other suffixes of OF. origin which have been weakened in pronunciation to (ə(r)); thus in border, bracer, it stands for OF. -ëure (:—L. -ātūram), commonly represented by -URE; in laver it stands for OF. -ëor, now -oir (:—L. ātōrium), in ME. rendered -OUR. The agent-suffix -OUR (OF. -ëor:—L. -ātōrem) is now very often replaced by -er; it can seldom be determined whether this is due to phonetic weakening, or to the substitution of -ER[1] for its Romanic synonym. Where the same word had in 14th c. the two forms -our and -er(e, as chaungeour, changer, the former supposition is excluded; but the forms in -er(e may possibly sometimes be a. OF. nominative forms in -ere:—L. -'ātor.

A. In adjs. ME. -er, -ere (-ore, -ure), -re, OE. -ra (fem., neut. -re) represents two different suffixes used in OTeut. to form the compar., viz.: -izon- (Goth. -iza, OHG., OS. -iro, ON. -ri with umlaut), and -ôzon- (Goth. -ôza, OHG. -ôro, ON. -ari). These OTeut. suffixes are f. the adverbial -iz, -ôz: see B. In OE. only a few comparatives retained the umlaut which phonetic law requires in the -izon- type; in mod.Eng. no forms with umlaut remain, except better, elder (OE. bętera, ieldra), the comparatives being ordinarily formed by adding -er to the positive. The 'irregular comparatives' worse (OE. wiersa = Goth. wairsiza) and less (OE. læssa) contain the suffix -izon in a disguised form, and the analogy of other comparatives has given rise to the extended forms worser and lesser. In mod.Eng. the comparatives in -er are almost restricted to adjs. of one or two syllables; longer adjs., and also disyllables containing any suffix other than -y or -ly, having the periphrastic comparison by means of the adv. more. Earlier writers, however, have beautifuller, eminenter, slavisher, etc.; a few modern writers, e.g. Carlyle, affect the same method. The periphrastic form is admissible (esp. in predicative use) for all adjs., even monosyllables, which are not extremely common colloquially.

2. In hinder, inner, the comparative suffix, though in WGer. and ON. formally coincident with that treated above, is quite distinct in origin, repr. OTeut. -eron-, f. OAryan -ero-.

B. In adverbs. The OE. form of the comparative suffix was -or, corresp. to OS., OHG. -ôr, Goth. -ôs:—OTeut. -ôz. OTeut. had also a suffix -iz with the same function, corresponding to L. -is in magis, nimis, and cogn. with L. -ior of adjs.; it is represented by Goth. -is, ON. -r with umlaut; in OE. by the umlaut in monosyllabic comparatives like lęng:—langiz* longer, bęt:—batiz* better, which died out in early ME., being superseded by the adj. forms. The relation between the two OTeut. suffixes is much disputed: a widely-held hypothesis is that -ôz is f. -ô adverbial suffix + -iz. The advbs. which take -er in the comparative are chiefly those which are now identical in form with adjs. (either repr. OE. advbs. in -e, or modern adverbial uses of the adj.): e.g. 'to work harder', 'to stand closer'. Exceptional instances are oftener, seldomer, sooner. The advbs. in -LY[2] are now compared periphrastically with more, though in earlier writers the inflexional comparison is common, e.g. easilier = more easily, ME. entierlocure = more entirely; in poetry it still occurs, as in keenlier (Tennyson).

-er, suffix[4], the ending of certain AF. infinitives used substantively as law terms, e.g. cesser, disclaimer, misnomer, trover, user, waiver. Of similar origin is the ending in dinner, supper, a. OF. disner, soper.

-er, suffix[5], forming frequentative vbs. The vbs. of this formation which can be traced in OE. have the form -rian (:—OTeut. -rôjan); e.g. clatrian CLATTER, flotorian FLUTTER. The other Teut. langs. have many vbs. of this type, denoting repeated action; often they are f. verbal bases, as MHG. wanderen = OE. wandrian WANDER, f. OTeut. wandjan* WEND v., ON. vafra WAVER, f. vafa = WAVE v.; sometimes app. on onomatopœic bases, as OHG. zwizarôn = TWITTER. Further examples in Eng. are batter, chatter, clamber, flicker, glitter, mutter, patter, quaver, shimmer, shudder, slumber.

-er, suffix[6]. Also -ers. Introduced from Rugby School into Oxford University slang, orig. at University College, in Michaelmas Term, 1875; used to make jocular formations on sbs., by clipping or curtailing them and adding -er to the remaining part, which is sometimes itself distorted. Among the earliest instances are FOOTER sb.[1] 3 b (= football) (1863), RUGGER[2] (1893), SOCKER (1891); TOGGER (1897), TOSHER[3] (1889); BONNER, BREKKER (1889), DIVVERS, EKKER (1891).

Other familiar examples are BEDDER[3], bed-sitter = bed-sittingroom, collekkers = collections (see COLLECTION 8), CUPPER[2], and (formerly) rudders = rudiments (of divinity), stragger = stranger. Examples of proper names are Adders = Addison's Walk, Bodder = Bodleian, Jaggers = Jesus (College), Quaggers = The Queen's College. (Cf. F. Madan Oxford outside the Guidebooks, 1923.)

The chronological use of the word appears to have originated in Spain; where (as also in Southern Gaul and North Africa) it is found in inscriptions prefixed to the number of years elapsed since 38 B.C., the selection of which as an initial year has not been satisfactorily explained. (Isidore of Seville in the 6th c. says that this was the year in which Augustus first ordered the taxation of Spain.) Thus 'æra (oftener written era) DXXXVIII' (= 'No. 538') meant the year 500 A.D. This method of reckoning was in use from the 5th to the 15th century, and Spanish Latin writers employed the word æra as its specific designation. The phrase æra Hispanica, 'Spanish æra', suggested to the scholars of the Renascence the parallel expressions æra Christiana, æra Varroniana, etc., in which the sb. had the generalized sense 'a reckoning of time from a particular epoch', for which no term had previously existed in Latin.]

1. A unit of work or energy; the amount of work done when a force of one dyne moves its point of application one centimetre in the direction of the force.

1873 Brit. Assoc. Rep. 224 We propose to denote it [the C.G.S. unit of work] by some derivative of the Greek ἔργον. The forms ergon, ergal and erg have been suggested..We propose, for the present, to leave the termination unsettled; and we request that the word ergon or erg be strictly limited to the C.G.S. unit of work, or what is for purposes of measurement, equivalent to this the C.G.S. unit of energy. 1874 MAXWELL in Life (1882) 632 Your sum of Vital energy Is not the millionth of an erg. 1875 GARNETT Elem. Dynamics (1889) §63 The C.G.S. unit of work is that done by a dyne in working through a centimetre and is called an erg.

2. Comb. as erg-nine, erg-ten, the product of an erg multiplied respectively by 10^9 and 10^{10}.

1873 Brit. Assoc. Rep. 224 One horse-power is equal to three quarters of an erg-ten per second. More nearly, it is 7·46 erg-nines per second.

WHEELER Ants vi. 94 The ergatanēr, ergatomorphic, or ergatoid male resembles the worker in having no wings and in the structure of the antennæ. Ibid. 96 The ergatogyne, ergatomorphic, or ergatoid female, is a worker-like form, with ocelli, large eyes, and a thorax more or less like that of the female, but without wings. Ibid. 99 The ergatandromorph .. is an anomaly similar to the [gynandromorph] but having worker instead of female characters combined with those of the male. Ibid. vii. 120 In these [sc. honey-bees] only the secondary instincts are manifested in the queen, while the worker retains the primary series in full vigor and thus more clearly represents the ancestral female of the species. This type may therefore be called ergatotelic. 1915 H. ST. J. K. DONISTHORPE Brit. Ants 114 Wasmann records a mixed ergatandromorph with only the colour of the head like that of the worker. 1927 Glasgow Herald 16 July 4 The ergatoids can reproduce ergatoids, besides workers and soldiers. 1970 BROWN & TAYLOR in Insects of Australia (C.S.I.R.O.) xxxvii. 952/2 Various wingless intermediates between queens and workers occur in some species. ergative ('ɜːgətɪv), a. Gram. [f. Gr. ἐργάτης workman + -IVE.] In full ergative case. A term used of a grammatical case marking the subject of a transitive verb in languages such as Eskimo, Basque, and some others. Also ellipt.

Ling.* vi. 179 This ending .. was necessarily the morpheme of an 'ergative' case. 1968 J. LYONS Introd. Theoret. Ling. viii. 352 The term .. for the syntactic relationship that holds between (1) [the stone moved] and (3) [John moved the stone] is 'ergative': the subject of an intransitive verb 'becomes' the object of a corresponding transitive verb, and a new ergative subject is introduced as the 'agent' (or 'cause') of the action referred to.

Hence ergа'tivity, the state or condition of being ergative.

1968 J. LYONS Introd. Theoret. Linguistics viii. 342 This syntactic parallelism between the 'goal' of a transitive verb and the subject of an intransitive verb is generally referred to as 'ergativity'. 1978 Language LIV. 216 Ergativity, accusativity, and other case phenomena. 1983 *Canad. Erlang ('ɜ:læŋ). The name of a Danish mathematician, Agner Krarup Erlang (1878–1929).

1. Used to designate various formulæ, functions, etc., derived by him or arising out of his work; as Erlang('s) distribution, a distribution function of the time required for the occurrence of n random events (see quot. 1960[1]); also, an Erlang loss formula; Erlang('s) formula, a formula giving the probability that a given number of lines in a communication system are occupied; spec., Erlang('s) congestion (or B- or first loss) formula, a formula giving the probability of congestion assuming that calls finding all lines occupied are cleared; Erlang('s) delay (or second loss) formula, a formula giving the probability of congestion assuming that such calls are delayed until a line is available. Hence Er'langian a. [-IAN].

1918 Post Office Electr. Engin. Jrnl. XI. 151 These durations are very far from complying with either of Mr. Erlang's distribution laws, yet the results agree closely with the theoretical curve. I think, therefore, Mr. Erlang's formula can be looked upon as being of quite general application. 1920 Ibid. XIII. 215 Erlang's formula states that if the average number of simultaneous calls is A, the probability of exactly r switches being engaged if the total number of switches is x, is $(A^r/r!)/(1 + A + A^2/2! + .. + A^r/r! + .. + A^x/x!)$. 1948 Bell Syst. Techn. Jrnl. XXVII. 425 The..assumption underlying the Erlang B formula is that of no delay. A call which encounters all trunks busy is cleared out. 1953 Ann. Math. Statistics XXIV. 339 We may also mention an intermediate type of input: E_k (Erlangian). 1954 A. JENSEN Distribution Model v. 16 Erlang's distribution corresponds to Poisson's distribution just as that of Pascal corresponds to the binomial distribution. 1960 R. SYSKI Congestion Theory Teleph. Syst. iv. 139 One has: $f_n(t)dt = (n\mu t)^{n-1} e^{-\mu nt} n\mu dt/(n-1)!$, $t \geqq 0$ where μ is a positive constant. This form is known as the Erlang distribution... In several cases, the Erlang distribution is the only one which yields explicit solutions to congestion problems. Ibid. v. 252 The famous Erlang's loss formula (his B-formula—denoted usually by $E_n(A)$)..serves as the basis of traffic calculations for most telephone administrations. 1968 P. A. P. MORAN Introd. Probability Theory ii. 87 We can also truncate the Poisson distribution on the other tail and obtain a bounded distribution

$n = 0, 1, \ldots, N$. This is also known as 'Erlang's distribution' and arises in the theory of telephone traffic.

2. A unit of the intensity of traffic in a communication system (see quot. 1960).

1947 Post Office Electr. Engin. Jrnl. XXXIX. 174/2 The proposal by the Swedish Administrations to use the name 'erlang' for the unit of intensity of traffic was adopted [by the 6th and 7th Commissions de Rapporteurs of the C.C.I.F.]. 1948 E. BROCKMEYER et al. Life & Wks. A. K. Erlang 20 The name of 'Erlang' has been used in the Scandinavian countries to denominate the unit of traffic since the beginning of 1944. 1951 Jrnl. R. Statistical Soc. B. XIII. 153 A parameter of special importance is the traffic-intensity $\rho \equiv b/a$; in a long period of time, T, there will be approximately T/a calls for service, each of mean length b, and so ρ is the expected service demanded per unit of time, in 'erlangs'... (Properly it is not a unit at all, but an indication of how the preceding figure has been calculated; in this respect it resembles the octave, the decibel and the stellar magnitude.) 1960 Gloss. Terms Telecomm. & Electronics (B.S.I.) 216 Erlang, the unit of traffic flow... An Erlang is..equivalent to the traffic flow in one circuit continuously occupied.

ermelin ('ɜ:məlɪn). Now arch. or poet. Also 6–7 armelin(e, ermilin, h)ermeline, (7 armlin), 6 ermly. The ulterior etymology shares in the uncertainty belonging to that of the synonymous ERMINE. If the latter be of Teut. origin, the Romanic forms above cited must be regarded as ad. MHG. hermelîn (mod.G. hermelin), dim. of harme:—OHG. harmo (see ERMINE). If the alternative view be correct, the med.L. type armelīnus must be a diminutive or adjectival formation on armenius, and the MHG. hermelîn an adoption from Romanic, though perh. influenced by association with the native word.]

ermine ('ɜ:mɪn), sb. Forms: 3–7 ermin, -yn(e, (4–7 hermin, -yn, 5–7 armin, -yn(e, -yon, 6 ermion, emerine), 3– ermine. [a. OF. (h)ermine (mod.F. hermine), cogn. with Pr. ermini, Sp. armiño (Minsheu). The remoter etymology is disputed.

Some scholars (including Kluge and Skeat) think that the Romanic word is ad. OHG. harmîn adj., 'belonging to the ermine', f. harmo ermine, stoat, weasel, corresp. to the synonymous OE. hearma (glossed 'megale' = mygale Wr.-Wülck. 32) and Lith. szermû (OAryan type k'ormōn-, -en-).

A different hypothesis (favoured by Littré, Paul Meyer, and others) is that the Romanic words represent L. Armenius Armenian. The mus Ponticus, 'Pontic rat', mentioned by Pliny as a fur-bearing animal, is commonly supposed, though without actual proof, to be the ermine; and as Pontus and Armenia were conterminous, it has been suggested that an alternative name for the animal may have been mus Armenius. That some animal was known by this designation in the second century is rendered probable by a passage in Julius Pollux (circa A.D. 180), who (Onomast. VII. 60) gives μυωτός as the name of an Armenian garment, and, amongst other conjectures as to the origin of the word, suggests that this article of dress may have been so named because made of the skins of 'the mice (or rats) of that country'. The belief that the ermine derived its name from Armenia was common in the 14th c., and the supposition accounts quite satisfactorily for the Romanic forms of the word. If this view be correct, it involves the consequence that the resemblance in sound between ermine and OHG. harmîn was merely accidental; there may however have been an early confusion between two distinct words of similar sound and meaning.]

In the senses represented by branch III it is ad. L. errant-em pr. pple. of errāre, (Fr. errer, of learned origin) to stray, wander, ERR. The primary notion in branch II is uncertain; it seems natural to interpret thief errant as 'vagrant' thief, and so to refer it to errare; but if Romanic scholars be right in referring juif errant (see 3) to iterāre, this derivation may be correct here; or perh. the two words were already confused when the phrase arose.]

ery, obs. form of EERY and EVERY.

-ery, suffix, ME. -erie, forming sbs., first occurs in words adopted from Fr., and after the analogy of these has been extensively used as an Eng. formative.

1. The Fr. -erie is of two distinct origins: a. Representing a com. Romanic -a'ria (Pr. -aria, It. -eria, Sp. -ería), produced by the addition of the suffix -'ia (Fr. -ie, -Y^3) to sbs. or adjs. formed with the L. suffix -ārio- (Fr. -ier, -er). A large proportion of the Fr. sbs. in -ier, -er (see -ER^2) are designations of persons according to occupation or office; their derivatives in -erie denote sometimes the class of goods in which these persons deal, as draperie drapery, f. drapier draper; sometimes their employment or art, as archerie archery, f. archer archer; sometimes the place where their occupation is carried on, as boulangerie bakery, f. boulanger baker. After the analogy of these, many Fr. words were formed with -erie from sbs. and adjs. without the intervention of a derivative in -ier. Examples of the varying force of the suffix are soierie silk goods, f. soie silk; niaiserie foolish conduct, f. niais foolish; juiverie Jewry, f. juif Jew. b. Resulting from the addition of the suffix -ie to agent-nouns in OF. -ere, -eor (mod.F. -eur):—L. -ātor, -ātōrem. After the analogy of words thus formed, the suffix -erie was used to form derivatives immediately from verb-stems. Of the Fr. sbs. in -erie derived from vbs. (either through an agent-noun or directly) some denote a class of actions, as tromperie deceit, f. tromper to deceive; others an occupation, art, etc., as confiserie the business of a confectioner, f. confire to preserve fruits, etc.; others the place where an occupation is carried on, as brasserie brewery, f. brasser to brew.

2. a. Of the Eng. words ending in -ery many are adoptions from Fr., as battery, bravery, cutlery, nunnery, treachery. Many others are formed on sbs. in -er, and are properly examples of the suffix -Y^3; but in individual instances it is often uncertain whether a word was originally formed on an agent-noun in -er or directly on the verb. The derivatives of sbs. in -er and of verbs for the most part denote the place where an employment is carried on, as bakery, brewery, fishery, pottery; occasionally they denote classes of goods, as confectionery, ironmongery, pottery; after the analogy of such words, the suffix is added to sbs. with a general collective sense (= '-ware', '-stuff', or the like) as in crockery, machinery, scenery. The words formed by adding -ery to sbs. sometimes (though rarely) signify a state or condition, as slavery; oftener the force of the suffix is 'that which is characteristic of, all that is connected with', in most cases with contemptuous implication, as in knavery, monkery, popery; another frequent use is to denote the place where certain animals are kept or certain plants cultivated, as piggery, rookery, swannery, vinery. During the last century this suffix in pl. form has been rather extensively used in the coinage of jocular nonce-words; the Fisheries Exhibition held at South Kensington in 1883 having been colloquially known as 'the Fisheries', the name 'Healtheries' was commonly given to the succeeding Health Exhibition, and the Colonial and Indian Exhibition was called 'the Colinderies'; an exhibition of bicycles and tricycles was called 'the Wheeleries'. These formations are often imitated colloquially. Cf. 'The Dukeries' (after the analogy of 'The Potteries') as a name for the tract of country occupied by the great ducal estates in Notts. and North Derbyshire.

b. In modern, chiefly U.S., use, after bakery (= baker's shop or works), and similar words, this suffix has gained considerable currency in denoting 'a place where an indicated article or service may be purchased or procured', as beanery, bootery, boozery, breadery, cakery, carwashery, drillery, drinkery, eatery, hashery, lunchery, mendery, toggery, wiggery.

3. In many words this suffix has now the contracted form -RY, q.v.

See also ASCAPE, ATSCAPE, OFSCAPE, SCAPE. [ME. eschape is a. Central OF. eschaper (mod.F. échapper), and ME. escape is a. ONF. escaper (mod. Picard écaper), corresp. to Pr., Sp., Pg. escapar, It. scappare:—late L. type excappāre*, f. ex out + cappa cloak. (For the sense, Diez compares Gr. ἐκδύεσθαι to put off one's clothes, to escape.) The earliest forms recorded in Eng. appear to be ASCAPE (after the ONF. variant ascaper) and the aphetic SCAPE, which occur in 13th c.; the former survived until 16th c.; the latter continued in ordinary use until 17th c., and as a poetic archaism (often written 'scape) is still employed. In 14th c. the forms of Central Fr. origin, eschape, ASCHAPE, ACHAPE, aphetically SCHAPE, CHAPE, are of frequent occurrence, esp. in northern writers, while in southern use the forms from Northern Fr., escape, ASCAPE, SCAPE, were more common. After 15th c. the former type is found only in Sc. writers, finally disappearing in 17th c. The forms ATSCAPE, OFSCAPE, occasional in 13–14th c., appear to be due to a confusion of the initial a- in ascape with the prepositional prefix in synonymous Eng. vbs.

In Fr. the vb. échapper has always remained intransitive. The development of the trans. senses in Eng. was assisted by the formal coincidence of the dative and the accusative; cf. also such constructions as 'to be banished the country'. Formerly the vb. was often conjugated with be, not only when intrans. (as still sometimes arch.) but also when transitive.]

-escent, suffix, forming adjs., repr. L. -ēscentem, the ending of pr. pples. of vbs. in -ēscĕre, chiefly inceptives, f. vbs. of state in -ēre. Primarily occurring in words ad. L. pples., as deliquescent, effervescent, obsolescent, putrescent, where the general sense is 'beginning to assume a certain state'. Hence in recent times the suffix has been used (both in Eng. and in other European langs.) to form adjs. upon sbs., as in alkalescent (? after acescent), and in several words referring to play of light or colour, as flourescent, iridescent, opalescent, phosphorescent.

b. In recent theological writing, esp. as 'realized eschatology' (see quot. 1957), the sense of this word has been modified to connote the present 'realization' and significance of the 'last things' in the Christian life.

1950 Scottish Jrnl. Dict. Chr. Ch. 462/1 In modern Protestant theology eschatology has been given a new meaning, esp. through the studies of A. Schweitzer... Acc. to him, primitive Christianity was exclusively an eschatological preaching of judgement and salvation. Eschatological considerations are also a dominant factor of the teaching of K. Barth and his school..which sees the life of the individual Christian and of the Church as a series of 'decisions' invested with an eschatological character... Recently many attempts have been made to draw out the present and abiding significance of future eschatological happenings, e.g. by C. H. Dodd in his conception of 'realized eschatology'.

I. Law.

1. An 'incident' of feudal law, whereby a fief reverted to the lord when the tenant died without leaving a successor qualified to inherit under the original grant. Hence, the lapsing of land to the Crown (in U.S., to the state), or to the lord of the manor, on the death of the owner intestate without heirs.

As an attainted person, according to the doctrine of 'corruption of blood' (see ATTAINDER), could have no legal heir, his property suffered escheat. This 'escheat by corruption of blood', theoretically distinct from the 'forfeiture' inflicted as a penalty for treason and felony, was abolished together with the latter by the Felony Act, 1870.

-ese, suffix, forming adjs., is ad. OF. -eis (mod.F. -ois, -ais):—Com. Romanic -ese (It. -ese, Pr., Sp. -es, Pg. -ez):—L. ēnsem. The L. suffix had the sense 'belonging to, originating in (a place)', as in hortēnsis, prātēnsis, f. hortus garden, prātum meadow, and in many adjs. f. local names, as Carthāginiēnsis Carthaginian, Athēniēnsis Athenian. Its representatives in the Romanic langs. are still the ordinary means of forming adjs. upon names of countries or places. In Eng. -ese forms derivatives from names of countries (chiefly after Romanic prototypes), as Chinese, Portuguese, Japanese, and from some names of foreign (never English) towns, as Milanese, Viennese, Pekinese, Cantonese. These adjs. may usually be employed as sbs., either as names of languages, or as designations of persons; in the latter use they formerly had plurals in -s, but the pl. has now the same form as the sing., the words being taken rather as adjs. used absol. than as proper sbs. (From words in -ese used as pl. have arisen in illiterate speech such sing. forms as Chinee, Maltee, Portugee.) A frequent mod. application of the suffix is to form words designating the diction of certain authors who are accused of writing in a dialect of their own invention; e.g. Johnsonese, Carlylese. On the model of derivatives from authors' names were formed Americanese, cablese, headlinese, journalese, newspaperese, novelese, officialese, etc.

Occurring in many words coming through Fr. from It., as in arabesque, burlesque, Dantesque, grotesque, romanesque, where the suffix has the sense 'resembling the style partaking of the characteristics of'. In Ital. derivatives in -esco are formed ad libitum on names of artists, and Fr. and Eng. writers on art have imitated this practice. The words formed with this suffix on Eng. sbs. are chiefly nonce-words of a jocular character, as cigaresque. Other formations separately noticed include Audenesque, Bramantesque, Browningesque, Caravagg(i)esque, Carlylesque, Chaplinesque, Dantonesque, Dickensesque, Disneyesque, Macaulayesque, Turneresque.

In Fr. the use of the word has been influenced by a mistaken association with écurie (OF. escurie), see EQUERRY. Some traces of this confusion appear in English use.]

2. A man belonging to the higher order of English gentry, ranking immediately below a knight.

Of esquires, legally so called, there are, according to some authorities, five classes: '(1) younger sons of peers and their eldest sons; (2) eldest sons of knights, and their eldest sons; (3) chiefs of ancient families (by prescription); (4) esquires by creation or office, as heralds and sergeants of arms, judges, officers of state, naval and military officers, justices of the peace, barristers-at-law; (5) esquires who attend the Knight of the Bath on his installation—usually two specially appointed' (Encycl. Brit., s.v.). The correctness of this enumeration, however, is greatly disputed; it would be impossible here to state the divergent views on the subject. In heraldic Latin the equivalent of esquire was armiger, properly = 'armour-bearer', but often taken in the sense 'one bearing (heraldic) arms'; hence, in 16th and 17th c. esquire was sometimes explained as meaning a man entitled to coat-armour; but by accurate writers this is condemned as involving the confusion between 'esquire' and 'gentleman'.

3. As a title accompanying a man's name. Originally applied to those who were 'esquires' in sense 2; subsequently extended to other persons to whom an equivalent degree of rank or status is by courtesy attributed.

a. Following the surname preceded by the Christian name. In formal documents written in full; elsewhere commonly abbreviated Esq. or Esqr. (In ceremonious use, e.g. in legal writings or in genealogy, when the name of the person's estate or of his place of residence is given, the title is, by English custom, placed last, as 'A.B., of C., Esquire'; in Scotland, on the contrary, the title immediately follows the surname. Similarly, in England the title 'esquire' traditionally follows the designation 'Junior' or 'The Younger', but in Scotland precedes it.)

The designation of 'esquire' is now commonly understood to be due by courtesy to all persons (not in clerical orders or having any higher title of rank) who are regarded as 'gentlemen' by birth, position, or education. It is used only on occasions of more or less ceremonious mention, and in the addresses of letters, etc.; on other occasions the prefix 'Mr.' is employed instead. When 'esquire' is appended to a name, no prefixed title (such as 'Mr.,' 'Doctor,' 'Captain,' etc.) is used. In the U.S. the title belongs officially to lawyers and public officers.

-ess, suffix[1], forming sbs. denoting female persons or animals, is a. Fr. -esse:—Com. Romanic -essa:—late L. -issa, a. Gr. -ισσα (:—-ikyā: cf. the OE. fem. agent-suffix -icge:—-igjôn-) occurring in class. Gr. only in βασίλισσα queen (f. βασιλ-εύς king), but after the analogy of this employed in several late formations, as βαλάνισσα bathing-woman, πανδόκισσα female innkeeper. A few of these (notably διακόνισσα, L. diaconissa deaconess) were adopted into late L. together with their correlative masculines, and many new derivatives of the same pattern were formed in Latin, whence they descended into the Romanic langs.; e.g. from abbātem abbot, was formed abbātissa, whence Fr. abbesse ABBESS. On the analogy of these the suffix became in Romanic the usual means of forming feminine derivatives expressing sex. In ME. many words in -esse were adopted from Fr., as countess, duchess, hostess, lioness, mistress, princess, and several which were formed on sbs. in -ëor, -ier (see -ER[2]), as †devoureresse, enchantress, †espyouresse, sorceress. In imitation of these the suffix was in 14th c. appended to Eng. agent-nouns in -er, as in Wyclif's dwelleresse, sleeress (f. sleer = SLAYER), and to other native words, as in goddess. In 15th c. derivatives in -er + -ess gradually superseded the older Eng. fem. agent-nouns in -STER (OE. -estre), which no longer had an exclusively feminine sense; subsequently the sbs. in -ster (exc. spinster) came to be regarded as properly masc., and new feminines in -ess were formed on them, as seamstress, songstress. By writers of 16th and succeeding centuries derivatives in -ess were formed very freely; many of these are now obsolete or little used, the tendency of mod. usage being to treat the agent-nouns in -er, and the sbs. indicating profession or occupation, as of common gender, unless there be some special reason to the contrary. Of the words of Eng. formation still in current use, examples are authoress, giantess, Jewess, patroness, poetess, priestess, quakeress, tailoress. In Eng. the suffix is not used to form feminines of names of animals: lioness, tigress being adoptions from Fr. When -ess is added to a sb. in -ter, -tor, the vowel before the r is usually elided, as in actress, doctress, protectress, waitress; the derivatives with ending -tress, f. L. agent-nouns in -tor, have in most cases been suggested by, and may be regarded as virtual adaptations of, the corresponding Fr. words in -trice:—L. -trīcem. The substitution of governess (already in Caxton) for the earlier governeresse f. governor was perh. due to false analogy with pairs of words like adulter-er, -ess, cater-er, -ess, sorcer-er, -ess; in conqueress, murderess, adventuress the similar phenomenon is sufficiently explained by phonetic reasons. The existence of such words, in which -ess has the appearance of being added directly to vbs., gave rise in the 17th. c. to formations like confectioness, entertainess, instructess; but none of these obtained general currency.

-ess, suffix[2], ME. -esse, in sbs. a. Fr., represents OF. -esse, -ece, = Pr. -ezza, -eza, Sp. -eza, It. -ezza:—L. -itia, appended to adjs. to form nouns of quality; examples are duress, †humblesse, largess, prowess, †richesse (now riches). These words have been imitated in the pseudo-archaic idlesse, but otherwise the suffix scarcely occurs as an Eng. formative.

†b. 'Species of existent being' (J.); an element. Chiefly in phrase, fifth essence, transl. of L. quinta essentia: see QUINTESSENCE.

The 'fifth essence' was a supposed substance distinct from the recognized four elements. What this fifth essence was, and where existing, was much disputed. Originally, it seems to have been the material of the starry heaven, as conceived by those who hesitated to identify it with 'fire'. Among the alchemists, it was usually supposed to be latent in all bodies, and to be capable of being extracted from them by distillation or some more recondite process; many thought that alcohol was one of its forms. Others regarded the discovery of the ' fifth essence' as one of the unrealized aims of science, and attributed to the hypothetical substance all sorts of miracle-working properties. Hence fifth essence or quintessence was used loosely in the various senses 'highly refined extract or essence' and 'universal remedy'.

b. Theol. A synonym of 'substance', as denoting that in respect of which the three persons in the Trinity are one.

The L. essentia literally renders Gr. οὐσία, the technical word in this sense. The alternative rendering, substantia, substance, corresponds literally to Gr. ὑπόστασις, which however in theological use meant not 'substance' but 'person'.

a. of a conceptual entity: The totality of the properties, constituent elements, etc., without which it would cease to be the same thing; the indispensable and necessary attributes of a thing as opposed to those which it may have or not. Also, in narrower sense, those among the indispensable attributes which involve all the rest by logical consequence, and are sufficient for a valid definition; the 'connotation of the class-name'.

These OTeut. suffixes are combinations of the two comparative suffixes -ôz-, -iz- with OAryan -to-; similar formations in other Aryan langs. are Gr. -ιστο-, Skr. ishṭha-. In OE. the two suffixes were already confused, so that -ost- occasionally appears with umlaut of the root-vowel, and conversely -est- without umlaut; a few umlaut forms survived into early ME., as lengeste longest; the only examples now remaining are best, eldest. In OE. (as in Gothic) the suffix -isto- was added to the stems of certain older superlatives formed with the suffix -m-; the resulting OE. ending -mest- was in later Eng. confused with the adv. most: cf. forma, fyrmest, foremost; innema, innemest, inmost: see -MOST. 6. a. An order or class regarded as part of the body politic, and as such participating in the government either directly or through its representatives.

The number of 'estates' in most of the nations of Christendom has usually been three (exceptionally four, as in Sweden and Aragon), but the specific enumeration has varied considerably. In England the 'estates' as represented in Parliament were originally 1. Clergy; 2. Barons and Knights; 3. Commons; after various fluctuations, the final arrangement was 1. Lords Spiritual; 2. Lords Temporal; 3. Commons. In France the three estates were 1. Clergy; 2. Nobles; 3. Townsmen. The Scottish estates were at first 1. Prelates; 2. Tenants in Chief; 3. Townsmen; after 1428 they were 1. Lords, lay and clerical; 2. Commissioners of Shires; 3. Burgesses. For a full account of the matter see Stubbs Const. Hist. xv.

third estate was formerly common (now much less so) as a designation of the English 'commons' or (transl. Fr. tiers état) the French bourgeoisie before the Revolution. The other two 'estates' are seldom spoken of numerically.

¶7. a. the (three) estates of the realm (see 6) has often been misused to denote the three powers whose concurrence is necessary for legislation, viz. the Crown, the House of Lords, and the House of Commons.

Perh. Aylmer (quot. 1559) took the word in sense 8, as he argues that the three forms of government, monarchy, aristocracy, and democracy, are united in the English constitution.

1559 BP. J. AYLMER Harb. Faithf. Subjects H iij, In the parliament hous .. you shal find these 3 estats. The king or Queene which representeth the Monarchie. b. the fourth estate: (a) formerly in various jocular applications (see quots.); (b) now appropriated to the Press.

We have failed to discover confirmation of Carlyle's statement (quot. 1841) attributing to Burke the use of this phrase in the application now current. A correspondent of Nates & Queries (1st Ser. XI. 452) states that he heard Brougham use it in the House of Commons in 1823 or 1824, and that it was at that time treated as original.

b. Accounts. The collective assets and liabilities of a person (esp. of a deceased person, a bankrupt, a cestui que trust) viewed as an entity capable of owing or being entitled to money, of being solvent or insolvent. Phrase, to wind up an estate. (By accountants often used in somewhat wider sense: The 'affairs' of a client so far as the accountant is concerned with them.)

Possibly this sense may be historically connected with 1 f, a 'ledger account' being spoken of in book-keeping as a creditor or debtor; but evidence is wanting.

In cases of felony and Petit Treason the king had the right of estrepement, i.e. of enjoying the felon's lands for a year and 'wasting' them to his heart's content. This being to the injury of the lord of the fee, it became customary to compound with the king for the right of estrepement, which came to be represented merely by a fine.

et, ME. variant of at prep.

-et, suffix[1], forming diminutives from sbs., represents OF. -et masc., -ete (mod.F. -ette) fem., corresp. to Pr. -et, -eta, Sp. -ito, -ita (also -ete, -eta in adopted words), It. -etto, -etta:—Com. Romanic -itto, -itta, of unknown (? non-Latin) origin. In Eng. the suffix occurs chiefly in Fr. words adopted into ME., as basnet, bullet, crotchet, fillet, gullet, hatchet, mallet, pocket, pullet, sonnet, tablet, turret, etc.; most of these are now used without any consciousness of their original diminutive sense. The distinction in form between the masc. and fem. suffixes was not often observed even in ME.; the spelling -ete however occasionally occurs for OF. -ete, as in polete pullet; in adoptions from mod.F. in 16th and 17th c. -et represented Fr. -ette as well as -et (e.g. in facet, islet); in more recent adoptions the latter usually remains as -ette. The suffix has been little used as an English formative, though words like riveret are found in 17th c. writers. Certain Fr. diminutives formed with -et on sbs. ending in -el (either diminutive or adjectival) have been adopted into Eng., and have given rise to the suffix -let, which has been largely employed to form diminutives in Eng.

-et, suffix[2], forming neuter verbal and denominative sbs., represents OE. -et(t (= Goth. -iti, OHG. -izzi), as in thicket.

-et, suffix[3], representing the 3rd pers. sing. pres. tense ending of Latin verbs of the second conjugation, as scilicet, tenet.

1. a. trans. To engrave (metals, sometimes glass, stone) by 'eating away' the surface with acids or other corrosives; chiefly, to engrave by this process (a copper or other metal plate) for the purpose of printing from it. Hence, to produce (figures), copy or reproduce (pictures, drawings, etc.), represent or portray (subjects) by this method.

In etching plates to be printed from, the metal is covered with a protective varnish called the ground, and the lines of the design are drawn through this substance with an 'etching-needle'; the acid is then poured over the ground, and acts on the plate only where its surface has been exposed by the needle. The vb. is also used of the production of designs on polished metal, esp. steel, by means of acids, the designs 'etched' appearing dead or clouded; also of the similar ornamentation of glass, the agent in this case being fluorine.

b. By those who hold that time, i.e. the relation of succession, pertains merely to things as viewed by finite intelligence, and not to absolute reality, the word as used of God or His actions is interpreted in the sense: Not conditioned by time; not subject to time relations.

Phrases in which the word has properly this sense are, however, often used in religious language without any definite recognition of the metaphysical theory which they imply, being taken as figurative expressions of the divine omniscience.

¶ The New Testament expressions eternal life, death, punishment, etc. are here referred to sense 3, this being the sense in which the adj. in such contexts is ordinarily taken. Other meanings have, however, been assigned to it: (a) Some theologians interpret it in the etymological sense, which is also that of Gr. αἰώνιος, 'lasting for an age or ages'; (b) others regard the adj. as expressive of a notion of quality in the conditions which it designates, either in addition to, or instead of, the notion of endless duration (cf. 1 b).

d. the eternities: (in vaguely concrete sense) things eternal; the eternal truths or realities. Frequent in Carlyle, and often cited (sometimes derisively) as characteristic of his style.

1843 CARLYLE Past & Pr. Wks. 1858 IX. 253 Truly, if a man cannot get some glimpse into the Eternities, looking through this portal,—through what other need he try it? 1878 MORLEY Carlyle 165 We begin with introspection and the eternities, and end in blood and iron.

2. Infinite time. The total eternity, which has neither beginning nor end, may be regarded as divided by any moment into two eternities: the past eternity (in scholastic language æternitas a parte ante), and the future eternity (æternitas a parte post). Hence the applications of the word in this sense may be classed as follows:

a. Absolute eternity, having neither beginning nor end.

1587 GOLDING De Mornay i. 6 The eternitie hath not any thing either afore or after it. 1667 MILTON P.L. II. 148 Those thoughts that wander through Eternity. 1802 PALEY Nat. Theol. xxiv. (1819) 396 Eternity is a negative idea, clothed with a positive name. 1856 DOVE Logic Chr. Faith III. 132 Infinite time is called eternity.

b. The two 'eternities'.

Syst.* 119 The Ancient Atheists..did at once deny both Eternities to the World: Past and Future. 1850 MRS. REYNOLOS John Bapt. ii. 63 The introduction of the first man into the world..was a dividing line between the eternities.

c. The past eternity.

1651 HOBBES Leviath. II. xxvi. 148 'Natural' are those which have been Lawes from all Eternity. 1812 COGAN Theol. Disq. I. i. (R.), A first cause; who, being uncaused, must exist from eternity.

3. Hyperbolical uses of 2: A space of time felt as 'endless'; a term indefinitely remote.

Jerus.* (1732) 90 With such absolute firmness as if it had been design'd for Eternity. 1813 BYRON Giaour 272 Tho' in Time's record nearly nought, It was Eternity to thought. 1856 H. MILLER Test Rocks ix. (1857) 354 A few more worlds..to which the destroying flood does not reach, save once or twice in an eternity or so.

4. In expressed or implied contrast with time.

a. In metaphysical sense (cf. ETERNAL 1 b): Timelessness; existence with reference to which the relation of succession has no application.

1662 HOBBES Consid. (1680) 50 Eternity is a permanent Now. 1853 MAURICE Theol. Essays (ed. 2) 450 Eternity, in relation to God, has nothing to do with time or duration.

b. Opposed to 'time' in its restricted sense of duration measured by the succession of physical phenomena. Hence, the condition into which the soul enters at death; the future life. Also, eternal welfare.

1602 SHAKS. Ham. I. ii. 73 All that liues must dye, Passing through Nature to Eternity. a 1650 CRASHAW Death Herrys, Weak time shall be pour'd out Into eternity. 1691 T. H[ALE] *Acc. HUTTON Ess. I. 247 The throne of heaven is to them a lonely one. The solitude of the eternities weighs upon their imaginations.

7. attrib., as eternity ring (see quots.).

1939-40 Army & Navy Stores Catal. 449/1 Diamond and Platinum Eternity Ring from £10 10 0. 1950 'P. WENTWORTH' Eternity Ring iv. 30 'You know the kind of ring they call an eternity ring?' It was variously regarded as a purer form of fire or of air, or as differing in kind from all the 'four elements'. By some it was supposed to be the constituent substance, or one of the constituents, of the soul.

5. a. Physics. A substance of great elasticity and subtilty, formerly believed to permeate the whole of planetary and stellar space, not only filling the interplanetary spaces, but also the interstices between the particles of air and other matter on the earth; the medium through which the waves of light are propagated. Formerly also thought to be the medium through which radio waves and electromagnetic radiations generally are propagated. Sometimes called the luminiferous ether. Also attrib., as in ether-strain, -vibration, -wave.

Later views of the ether were that it provided a frame of reference for the universe, with respect to which Maxwell's equations of electromagnetism or other field equations are valid, but that it possibly lacked any material properties. Following the special theory of relativity, which assumed that there is no absolute frame of reference and which explained why the Michelson–Morley experiment failed to detect an 'ether wind', the concept was gradually discarded in scientific thought, and has received little support since the 1920s.

6. Chem. a. The colourless, light, volatile liquid, ($C_4H_{10}O$) resulting from the action of sulphuric acid upon alcohol, whence it was also known as sulphuric, phosphoric, etc. ether. In popular and commercial use the incorrect name 'sulphuric ether' is still common, and the term 'ether' without prefixed word is ordinarily understood to refer to this substance, which in technical nomenclature is now distinguished as common, ethylic, or vinic ether, or ethyl oxide. It is an anæsthetic, and capable of producing extreme cold by its evaporation. The mod. systematic name is diethyl ether, usu. given as ethyl ether; ethoxyethane is occas. used. Also attrib. (Cf. ETHERICAL a. sense.)

†b. Any of various compounds analogous to ethyl ether, formed by the reaction of ethyl alcohol and either an acid (other than sulphuric acid) or a salt and sulphuric acid. Obs.

The compounds were named according to the acid or salt from which they were derived: e.g. nitrous acid gave nitrous ether (now called ethyl nitrite, $C_2H_5NO_2$). The extension of meaning of the word ether thus took place in two stages, the first including other acids in the preparation, the second other alcohols (giving sense 6 c).

1796 R. HERON tr. Fourcroy's Elem. Chem. & Nat. Hist. III. 424 The nitric æther obtained by these processes is a yellow fluid, equally volatile and susceptible of evaporation with sulphuric æther. Ibid. 427 M. de la Planche, apothecary, has proposed the preparing of muriatic æther, by pouring..sulphuric acid and alcohol upon decrepitated muriate of soda. a 1797 *Encycl. L. BLOXAM Chem. 522 Acetic ether..has a share in the perfume of cider, perry, vinegar, and of many wines. 1962 M. P. CROSLAND Hist. Stud. Lang. Chem. v. i. 289 The authors [of the Méthode de nomenclature chimique (1787)] had decided that each of the aetherial compounds obtained by the reaction of alcohol with various acids should be known as 'ether' qualified by an adjective according to the acid used to prepare it, e.g. éther acétique (i.e. ethyl acetate). Most of these 'ethers' were what we should now call esters.

c. Hence by extension, the generic name of a large class of compounds, formed by the action of acids upon alcohols, divided into (1) simple ethers, of which the above Common Ether is the type, and which comprise the oxides, sulphides, chlorides, etc. of alcohol radicals. (2) compound ethers, in which the hydrogen of the hydroxyl of an alcohol is replaced by an acid-radical. In mod. use, ether is restricted to compounds of the type R_2O (simple ethers) and ROR′ (mixed ethers), where R, R′ are organic groups (other than acyl groups and their analogues) linked directly to the oxygen by a carbon atom; compound ethers are now known as ESTERS.

The replacement of the hydrogen of the hydroxyl in an alcohol by acid radicles produces ethereal salts or compound ethers. 1950 L. F. & M. FIESER *Org. ethnology (ɛθ'nɒlədʒɪ). [f. Gr. ἔθνο-ς nation + -λογία discourse: see -LOGY.] The science which treats of races and peoples, and of their relations to one another, their distinctive physical and other characteristics, etc.

1842 PRICHARD Nat. Hist. Man 132 The history of nations termed ethnology, must be mainly founded on the relations of their languages. 1847 Proc. Amer. Phil. Soc. IV. 358 Dr. Bethune made some remarks on ethnology, a term he preferred to ethnography. 1878 LUBBOCK Preh. Times Pref. 9 Ethnology in fact is passing at present through a phase from which other sciences have safely emerged.

ethnomaniac (ɛθnəʊ'meɪnɪæk). [f. Gr. ἔθνο-ς nation + MANIAC.] One who is crazy about the rights of 'nationalities'.

ethnomethodological (ˌɛθnəʊmɛθədɒ'lɒdʒɪkəl), a. Sociol. [f. ETHNOMETHODOLOGY: see -ICAL.] Of or pertaining to ethnomethodology.

1967 H. GARFINKEL Stud. Ethnomethodol. p. v, Ethnomethodological studies analyze everyday activities as members' methods for making those same activities visibly-rational-and-reportable-for-all-practical-purposes, i.e., 'accountable', as organizations of commonplace everyday activities. 1973 *Social Sci. ethnomethodologist (ˌɛθnəʊmɛθə'dɒlədʒɪst). Sociol. [f. ETHNOMETHODOLOGY + -IST.] A student or practitioner of ethnomethodology.

1967 Social Problems XIV. 427/1 The present paper represents an attempt to combine the two approaches by applying methods developed by the ethnoscientists to a problem conceptualized in terms relevant to an ethnomethodologist. 1972 Science 12 May 627/3 He does not interview people (as cognitive psychologists and ethnomethodologists do). 1975 *Brit. ethnomethodology (ˌɛθnəʊmɛθə'dɒlədʒɪ). Sociol. [f. ETHNO- + METHODOLOGY.] A style of sociological analysis associated with H. Garfinkel (b. 1917), which seeks to expose and analyse the methods by which participants in a given social situation construct their commonsense knowledge of the world.

1967 H. GARFINKEL Stud. Ethnomethodol. i. 11, I use the term 'ethnomethodology' to refer to the investigation of the rational properties of indexical expressions and other practical actions as contingent ongoing accomplishments of organized artful practices of everyday life. 1974 R. ethnomusicology (ˌɛθnəʊmjuːzɪ'kɒlədʒɪ). [f. Gr. ἔθνο-ς nation + MUSICOLOGY.] The scientific study of the music of a culture or sub-culture, considered either as a combination of sounds or as an aspect of socio-cultural behaviour; also, the comparative study of the music of more than one culture. Hence ˌethnomusico'logical a., pertaining to this study; ˌethnomusi'cologist, a student of or expert in ethnomusicology.

1950 J. KUNST Musicologica Pref., It is intended as a general introduction to ethno-musicology, before going on to the study of the forms of separate musie-cultures. 1951 Africa Jan. 319 This work fulfilled a long-standing need by ethnomusicologists. 1958 Listener 15 May 824/3 The book reflects the present state of ethnomusicological studies. 1959 *Times Lit. ethnonym ('ɛθnəʊnɪm). Anthropol. [f. ETHNO- + -nym, as in HOMONYM, PSEUDONYM; app. a. Russ. étnonim (cf., for example, Sovetskaya Étnografiya (1946), IV. 34); also étnonimika 'ethnonymics', the study of ethnonyms (1939).] A proper name by which a people or ethnic group is known; spec. one which it calls itself.

1964 tr. Levin & Potapov's Peoples of Siberia 761 The Chinese knew the Oroks as 'Oron'cho'. The etymology of this and related ethnonyms is probably derived from the Manchu and Tungus word for the domesticated reindeer —oro or oron. Names with this root usually mean 'reindeer people' or 'reindeer breeders'. 1966 Y. MALKIEL in Current Trends in Linguistics III. 360 Refractory ethnonyms fell into desuetude in Romance. 1974 Y. V. BROMLEY in Grigulevich & Koslov Races & Peoples 34 A peculiar but..essential distinctive ethnic feature is ethnic consciousness, i.e., the awareness by members of a given ethnos of their affinity to it, this awareness being..manifested first of all by a common ethnonym. 1980 —— in E. Gellner Soviet & Western Anthropol. III. 155 An ethnic community proper or ethnos in the general sense..may be defined as an historically formed aggregate of people who share relatively stable specific features of culture (including language) and psychology, an awareness of their unity and their difference from other similar groups, and an ethnonym which they have given themselves. 1983 D. L. GOLD in Comments on Etym. XII. 26 Some Hebrew-speakers interpret the informal Israeli Hebrew ethnonym yeke (which is clearly from Eastern Yiddish yeke) as being from (Heb.) *y*ehudi *K*eshe-*h*avana 'Jew [who is] hard of understanding' (Heb. yeke is spelled *y*od-*k*of-*h*e).

ethnophaulism (ɛθnəʊ'fɔːlɪz(ə)m). [f. ETHNO- + -phaulism, f. Gr. φαύλισμα disparagement, contempt, f. φαυλίζω to hold cheap.] A contemptuous expression for (a member of) a people or ethnic group; an expression containing a disparaging allusion to another people or ethnic group.

1944 A. A. ROBACK Dict. Internat. Slurs 13, I can visualize, however, a future edition which would contain more extended inventories of the foreign disparaging allusions (or as I have named them, 'ethnophaulisms') in a score of languages. 1962 E. ethnopsychology (ˌɛθnəʊsaɪ'kɒlədʒɪ). [f. Gr. ἔθνο-ς nation, people + PSYCHOLOGY.] The investigation of the psychology of races and peoples.

1886 LANG in 19th Cent. XIX. 58 For this method [philological] we propose to substitute .. the method of Völkerpsychologie .. or ethnopsychology.

Hence ‚ethnopsycho'logical a., of or pertaining to ethnopsychology.

ethnoscience (ɛθnəʊ'saɪəns). [f. Gr. ἔθνο-ς nation + SCIENCE.] The study of races or cultures; ethnography.

1964 E. A. NIDA Toward Sci. Transl. iii. 38 B. N. Colby in an unpublished paper, entitled 'Eidos, Semantics and Ethnoscience', has dealt extensively with a number of these approaches to studies of semantic fields. 1964 Language XL. 230 The terminology which is now appearing in anthropological literature devoted to ethnoscience.

ethnosemàntic (‚ɛθnəʊsɪ'mæntɪk), a. [f. ETHNO- + SEMANTIC a.: see next.] Of or pertaining to ethnosemantics.

1967 Word XXIII. 219 In the 'ethnosemantic' school of contemporary American anthropology, the analysis of whole semantic regions .. in terms of combinations of recurrent features has come to be called a paradigm. 1983 Anthropol. Linguistics XXV. 316 Before revealing these connections, we come to the issue of ethnosemantic misinterpretation. Ibid. 322 The phenomenon of persistence of myth in such diverse form confirms, finally, the ethnosemantic interpretation of the charm.

ethnosemantics (‚ɛθnəʊsɪ:'mæntɪks), sb. pl. (const. sing.). [f. ETHNO- + semantics (see SEMANTIC sb. 1): see prec.] The study of how members of a speech community categorize their experience, esp. by analysing the semantic organization of the vocabulary of the community.

1968 M. HARRIS Rise Anthropol. Theory xx. 585 Since much of the terminological data which provides the basis for the ethnosemantics of kinship derives from fieldwork that can no longer be repeated, there is little hope of correcting for overagreement in the formal accounts. 1975 *Gen. ethogram ('i:θəʊgræm). Zool. [f. Gr. ἦθο-ς (see ETHOLOGY 4) + -GRAM.] (A catalogue of) all the different kinds of behaviour or activity exhibited by an animal.

1936 Ardea XXV. 60 An attempt has been made to give an exhaustive description of the habits (an ethogram) of the European Avocet. 1964 Oceanogr. & Marine Biol. II. 457 Behaviour is observed .. and the various elements or movements of the behaviour are carefully described. In this way an ethogram, or catalogue of the behavioural repertoire, of the species is obtained, and names can be assigned to the various components. 1977 SAVAGE & RUMBAUGH in D. M. Rumbaugh *Lang. 2. In reference to ancient æsthetic criticism and rhetoric.

Aristotle's statement that Polygnotus excelled all other painters in the representation of 'ethos' app. meant simply that his pictures expressed 'character'; but as Aristotle elsewhere says that this painter portrayed men as nobler than they really are, some mod. writers have taken ethos to mean 'ideal excellence.' The opposition of ethos and pathos ('character' and 'emotion'), often wrongly ascribed to Aristotle's theory of art as expounded in the Poetics, really belongs only to Greek rhetoric.

1875 A. S. MURRAY in Encycl. Brit. II. 359 s.v. Archæology, By ethos, as applied to the paintings of Polygnotus, we understand a dignified bearing in his figures, and a measured movement throughout his compositions. 1881 *Q. -ette, suffix. 1. Forming diminutive sbs., represents OF. -ette, the fem. form corresponding to the masc. -et: see -ET[1]. In early Eng. use the Fr. -et and -ette (OF. -ete) were not clearly distinguished, and in 15th c. -ette is a mere variant spelling of -et; e.g. the OF. basinet occurs sometimes in Eng. as basinette. The older adoptions of Fr. words in -ette, so far as they survive, are now written with -ET[1]; the spelling -ette belongs chiefly to words introduced since 17th c., as chemisette, cigarette, eprouvette, etiquette, pipette, serviette. During the present century a few words have been formed by the addition of -ette to Eng. sbs.; most of these, as leaderette, sermonette, essayette, can scarcely be said to be in good use, though often met with in newspapers; wagonette, however, is well established. Formations of this kind are very common in the names given by manufacturers to materials intended as imitations of something else: one such word which has come into general use is leatherette.

eu-, prefix, repr. Gr. εὐ-, combining form of ἐύς good, used in neut. form εὖ as adv. = well. In Gr. the words with this as first element are primarily adjs. (often used as sbs., and in many instances giving rise to derivative sbs. or vbs.). Of these many are parasynthetic f. sbs., as εὔστομος having a good mouth, f. στόμ-α mouth, εὐσχήμων having a good form, f. σχῆμ-α form. In others the second element is a verbal root or a verbal adj. in -τος; the sense of the compound varies (often in the same word) between active and passive; in those that are active the prefix has the force of 'well'; in those of passive signification its sense is sometimes 'well', more commonly 'easily': thus, εὐλαβής 'taking good hold', 'easy to take hold of', f. λαβ- 'to take'; εὔπρᾱκτος 'doing well, prosperous', 'easy to do', f. πρᾱκ- (πρᾶσσειν) to do; εὔποίητος well made, f. ποιεῖν to make. In Eng. the prefix occurs almost exclusively in words of Gr. derivation, as eulogy, euphemism, or formed on Gr. elements, as eucalyptus; the few exceptions are terms of mod. scientific classification.

In late L. the u in this prefix when occurring before vowels was consonantized (i.e. became v), and in order to preserve the traditional quantity of the syllable the ē was made long, as in ēvangelium. The derivatives and cognates of evangelium are almost the only words current in Eng. with the ev- form of the prefix; in Fr. it is much more common, being used even in recent formations from Gr. elements.

euchre ('ju:kə(r)), sb. Formerly also uker, yuker, eucre. [Of uncertain etymology.

As BOWER sb.[8], one of the terms used in this game, is of Ger. origin, it has often been supposed that the word euchre is also from German, but no probable source has been found in that lang. Can it be a Sp. yuca, in the phrase ser yuca, given by Caballero as an American expression for 'to be cock of the walk, to get the best in anything' (ser el gallito en alguna cosa, sobresalir en algo)?]

1. A game at cards, of American origin, played by 2, 3, or 4 persons, with a pack of 32 cards (the 2, 3, 4, 5, 6 of each suit being rejected). A player may, if he pleases, 'pass' or decline to play, but if he undertakes to play, and fails to take 3 tricks, he or his side is said to be 'euchred' and the other side gains two points.

The highest cards at Euchre are the knave of trumps and the other knave of the same colour (see BOWER sb.[8]); the other cards used rank as in whist. There are various modifications of the game, as Railroad Euchre, played with the usual 32 cards and an extra blank card called 'the joker' , or 'imperial trump', which is superior to all; French Euchre, played with 24 cards; and others.

2. An instance of 'euchreing' or being 'euchred'.

1880 Amer. Hoyle 75 No. 1 deals, but .. fearing a euchre, he turns down the trump.

Hence 'euchreist, a player at euchre.

1861 W. H. RUSSELL in Times 10 July, The sentry tells his captain, who is an euchreist, that 'It's all right,' and resumes his seat and his cigar.

euchre ('ju:kə(r)), v. [f. prec. sb.] trans. At euchre: To gain the advantage over (an adversary) by his failure to take three tricks: see the sb. Hence transf. to outwit, 'do', 'best'. Also, to euchre (a person) out of (a thing).

1934 L. W. SHARP Introd. Cytol. (ed. 3) iii. 57 In many nuclei there are at certain stages one or more conspicuous masses of karyotin at several points in the reticulum. Of the many terms applied to these the most suitable seems to be chromocenters... In some cases it has been shown that they represent definite chromosomal regions which remain condensed and highly chromatic... These euchromocenters appear to correspond in part to the 'prochromosomes'. 1937 Nature 22 May 889/2 During prophase, in addition to the euchromocentres, the nucleolus and nuclear sap also stain faintly with Feulgen. 1968 R. So also Euclidean space: the kind of space actually known to us, for which these axioms are valid, as opposed to hypothetical kinds of space for which one or more of the axioms would be false.

An instrument for testing the purity of the air, or rather the quantity of oxygen it contains.

Various kinds have been in use, but the commonest is that invented by Dr. Ure, consisting of a tube closed at one end, in which certain quantities of hydrogen and atmospheric air are exploded over water by an electric spark. From the rise of the water in the tube inferences are drawn as to the amount of oxygen that was present. The apparatus is also, and now chiefly, employed in the analysis of gases.

Hence applied to any similar kind of affectation in writing or speech, and (loosely) to affectedly periphrastic or 'high-flown' language in general.

The chief features of 'euphuism' in the proper sense are: the continual recurrence of antithetic clauses in which the antithesis is emphasized by means of alliteration; the frequent introduction of a long string of similes all relating to the same subject, often drawn from the fabulous qualities ascribed to plants, minerals, and animals; and the constant endeavour after subtle refinement of expression. The sense in which (exc. in books on literary history) the word is now commonly used, is chiefly suggested by the absurd bombast which Scott puts into the mouth of Sir Piercie Shafton (who is described as a 'Euphuist') in The Monastery: this caricature, however, bears very little resemblance to the genuine 'euphuism'. Some loose uses of the word can hardly be accounted for exc. by supposing that the writers (recognizing the familiar prefix eu-) had the notion that its etymological sense was 'fine talking' or something equivalent.

1. Of or pertaining to Eusebius.

a. A distinctive epithet applied in the 4th c. to the Arians, from their leader Eusebius, bishop of Nicomedia.

(Mod. writers have often regarded it as referring to his contemporary Eusebius of Cæsarea, whose theology was rather semi-Arian than Arian, and who formed no party.)

1882–3 SCHAFF Relig. Encycl. I. 161/2 Gregorius, a bishop of the Eusebian party.

b. Pertaining to Eusebius of Cæsarea, or the historical works written by him. Eusebian Canons: an arrangement of the contents of the four Gospels into ten classes of passages, according as the passages occur in Matthew, Mark, Luke, or John alone, or in any one of the nine possible combinations of two or three out of the four. Numerals referring to these canons are often found in MSS. of the Greek N.T. and of the early versions.

1906 H. B. C. SOLLAS tr. Suess's Face of Earth II. III. xiv. 538 We must commence by separating from the various other changes which affect the level of the strand, those which take place at an approximately equal height, whether in a positive or negative direction, over the whole globe; this group we will distinguish as eustatic movements. The formation of the sea basins produces spasmodic eustatic negative movements. 1934 R. A. eutectic (ju:'tɛktɪk), a. and sb. [ad. Gr. εὔτηκτος easily melting (f. εὐ- EU- + τήκ-ειν to melt) + -IC.]

A. adj. That is a eutectic; of or pertaining to a eutectic or its liquefaction or solidification; eutectic point, the melting-point of a eutectic, or the point representing it in a constitutional diagram.

1884 F. GUTHRIE in Phil. Mag. 5th Ser. XVII. 462 The main argument..hinges upon the existence of compound bodies, whose chief characteristic is the lowness of their temperatures of fusion. This property..may be called Eutexia, the bodies possessing it eutectic bodies or eutectics (εὖ τήκειν)... It will, however, perhaps be better to make the term more useful by limiting its application. I shall use it.. for bodies made up of two or more constituents..in such proportion to one another as to give to the resultant compound body..a lower temperature of liquefaction than that given by any other proportion. 1885 Nature 5 Nov. 21/1 When metals do unite in atomic ratios the alloy produced is never eutectic, i.e., having a minimum solidifying-point. Thus pure cast-iron is..an eutectic alloy of carbon and iron. 1902 [see B. sb. below]. 1910 Encycl. Brit. I. 705/2 The two sloping lines cutting at the eutectic point are the freezing-point curves of alloys. 1911 Ibid. XXI. 330/1 This mixture, which is known as the eutectic mixture, has the lowest melting-point of any which can be formed from these minerals. 1950 Engineering 16 June 672/2 Fusible plugs of eutectic alloys. 1967 A. H. COTTRELL Introd. Metallurgy xvi. 253 This is the ternary eutectic point at which the liquid is in equilibrium with all three solids A, B and C.

B. sb. 1. A mixture which is distinguished from other mixtures of the same constituents in different proportions by having a single temperature at which it melts and freezes, this temperature being lower than the freezing-point of any of the constituents or of any other mixture of them. Also fig.

1884 [see A. adj. above]. 1884 Asclepiad Oct. App. 3 Eutexia..applies to compound bodies in chemistry 'whose chief characteristic is the lowness of their temperature of fusion.' They are henceforth to be called eutectics. 1885 Athenæum 28 Mar. 412/3 The temperature of liquefaction of a eutectic substance is lower than the temperature of either, or any, of the metallic constituents of an alloy. 1902 Encycl. Brit. XXVIII. 569/2 The eutectic F[reezing] P[oint] is of longer duration, but still at the same temperature. For an alloy of the composition of the eutectic itself there is no arrest until the eutectic temperature is reached. 1923 GLAZEBROOK Dict. Applied Physics V. II. 454/2 This most fusible alloy of a system is termed the 'eutectic' and its microscopic appearance is often characterised by fine laminations. 1926 AUDEN in Oxford Poetry I Love mutual has reached its first eutectic. 1948 GLASSTONE Physical Chem. (ed. 2) x. 750 Only a pure substance, or a mixture having the composition of the eutectic, melts sharply at a definite temperature. 1954 Proc. Prehistoric Soc. XX. 76 It is probably true that speculum is not very far removed from the eutectic of copper and tin. 1958 Van Nostrand's Sci. Encycl. (ed. 3), Eutectic... By a similar usage in petrology, a eutectic is a discrete mixture of two or more minerals, in definite proportions, which have simultaneously crystallized from the mutual solution of their constituents.

2. A eutectic point.

1940 GLASSTONE Physical Chem. x. 740 The temperature at which the first minute drops of liquid appear..is the eutectic for the given system. 1967 A. H. COTTRELL Introd. Metallurgy xiv. 210 Such a singular point of phase equilibrium is known as a eutectic or peritectic.

eutectiferous (ju:tɛk'tɪfərəs), a. [f. EUTECT(IC + -IFEROUS.] Bearing or producing eutectics; of eutectic form or kind.

1925 P. HIDNERT Thermal Expansion Aluminum 715 Previous observers found that these alloys form a eutectiferous series with no chemical compounds. 1950 Engineering 3 Feb. 136/1 Cast irons are frequently described as eutectiferous alloys. 1953 Sci. News XXVIII. 111 In a simple 'eutectiferous' system the liquid breaks down into the elementary metals.

eutectoid (ju:'tɛktɔɪd), a. and sb. Metallurgy. [f. EUTECT(IC a. and sb. + -OID.] A. adj. That is a eutectoid; of or pertaining to a eutectoid or its transformation; eutectoid point, the transformation temperature of a eutectoid, or the point representing it in a constitutional diagram. B. sb. A solid analogous to a eutectic, in which the high temperature phase is a solid solution instead of a liquid and the constituents separate out simultaneously when it is cooled to the transformation temperature.

1903 H. M. Howe Iron, Steel, & Other Alloys 440 The word 'eutectoid' occurred to me (June 7, 1903)... It suggests having the shape or other important properties of the 'eutectic', while the two words differ from each other enough to indicate that they refer to really distinct things. 1910 Encycl. Brit. XIV. 805/1 Excess of iron over this eutectoid ratio. Ibid., Far below the freezing-point, transformations may take place in the solid metal, and follow a course quite parallel with that of freezing, though with no suggestion of liquidity. A 'eutectoid' is to such a transformation in solid metal what a eutectic is to freezing proper. 1925 Jrnl. Iron & Steel Inst. CXI. 584 The eutectoid occurring at 0·89 per cent. carbon theoretically should be regarded as a eutectoid of iron and a solid solution containing about 2·0 per cent of carbon. 1946 Thorpe's Dict. Appl. Chem. (ed. 4) VII. 596/2 In this case..it is the solid solution beta breaking down into the two solutions alpha and gamma, and the point P is known as a eutectoid point. 1950 Engineering 15 Dec. 492/3 Austenite in a plain eutectoid steel could decompose isothermally. 1961 J. N. Anderson Appl. Dent. Mat. (ed. 2) vi. 56 One such reaction ..is known as a eutectoid reaction. This involves the breakdown as a solid solution at a definite temperature to produce an intimate mechanical mixture of two solids.

eutelegenesis (juːtɛlɪˈdʒɛnɪsɪs). [mod.L., f. EU- + TELE- + -GENESIS.] (See quots.)

1935 H. Brewer in Eugenics Rev. XXVII. 123 For the process of reproduction from the germ cells of individuals between whom is no bodily contact, I propose the name telegenesis. The possible application of the process to the eugenic breeding of man may be termed eutelegenesis. 1936 Nature (Suppl.) 12 Sept. 447/2 Recent successful experiments with mammals in parthenogenesis and eutelegenesis. 1962 Daily Tel. 7 June 19/7 What is known as eutelegenesis, namely insemination by sperm from some admired donor to 'father' their children.

The idea is due to St. Jerome, in whose writings it frequently occurs in various forms: e.g. he says (Ad Paulam, Wks. 1575 III. 18) that Isaiah 'non tam propheta dicendus est quam evangelista.'

2. Since the Reformation adopted as the designation of certain theological parties, who have claimed that the doctrines on which they lay especial stress constitute 'the Gospel'. This claim is of course disallowed by their adversaries, but (as in the case of other self-assumed party names) the designation has received the sanction of general usage.

a. = PROTESTANT. Now only with reference to Germany and Switzerland, where its German and French equivalents are also applied in narrower sense to the Lutheran as distinguished from the 'Reformed' or Calvinistic Church. In the German Empire 'The Evangelical Church' was the official name of the established Protestant Church of Prussia, formed in 1817 by the union of the Lutheran and Reformed churches.

b. From 18th c. applied to that school of Protestants which maintains that the essence of 'the Gospel' consists in the doctrine of salvation by faith in the atoning death of Christ, and denies that either good works or the sacraments have any saving efficacy.

Other features more or less characteristic of the theology of this school are: a strong insistence on the totally depraved state of human nature consequent on the Fall; the assertion of the sole authority of the Bible in matters of doctrine, and the denial of any power inherent in the Church to supplement or authoritatively interpret the teaching of Scripture; the denial that any supernatural gifts are imparted by ordination; and the view that the sacraments are merely symbols, the value of which consists in the thoughts which they are fitted to suggest. As a distinct party designation, the term came into general use, in England, at the time of the Methodist revival;and it may be said, with substantial accuracy, to denote the school of theology which that movement represents, though its earlier associations were rather with the Calvinistic than the Arminian branch of the movement. In the early part of the 19th c. the words 'Methodist' and 'Evangelical' were, by adversaries, often used indiscriminately, and associated with accusations of fanaticism and 'puritanical' disapproval of social pleasures. The portion of the 'evangelical' school which belongs to the Anglican church is practically identical with the 'Low Church' party. In the Church of Scotland during the latter part of the 18th and the early part of the 19th c. the two leading parties were the 'Evangelical' and the 'Moderate' party.

The OE. forms appear to agree only in the root (OAryan ēp or ēbh) with the other Teut. forms: the OTeut. type of the OHG., OS., OFris. forms would be æ̂bando-*, that of the OE. æfen, éfen would be æ̂binjo-* or æ̂bunjo-*. The ONorthumb. éfern is app. an alteration of éfen(n; cf. ONorthumb. wéstern, festern (= WS. wésten, fæsten), and OFris. forms like epernia to open.

One hypothesis as to the relation of the forms is that æ̂bando-* represents a pre-Teut. ēpont-*, a pr. pple. act., and that derivatives of a corresponding passive pple. occur in ON. aptann:— ēptono-*) and OE. æfen (:— æ̂bunjo-:— ēptŋyo- or ēpŋyo-*. The etymological sense is unknown; a not inappropriate meaning for the act. and pass. formations is suggested by Gr. ἥπιος, mild, gentle (sometimes used with reference to temperature) which may possibly belong to the same root.]

9. Intimating that the sentence expresses an extreme case of a more general proposition implied (= Fr. même). Prefixed (in later use often parenthetically postfixed) to the particular word, phrase, or clause, on which the extreme character of the statement or supposition depends.

This use, now the prevailing one in Eng., is foreign to the other Teut. langs. It is rare in purely dialectal speech, and (though a natural development of 8) seems not to have arisen before the 16th c. Cotgrave 1611 does not give even among the equivalents of Fr. mesme. The phrase not even (= L. ne .. quidem) is rare in early use; Cooper Lat. Dict. 1572 renders ne in publicis quidem by 'no, not in common affaires' (though for ne nunc quidem he has 'no, not euen now': see 6 b); Walker Dict. Particles 1673 renders ne .. quidem only by 'no, not so much as'; the earliest Lat. Dict. that gives 'no, not even' is app. Ainsworth 1736.

ever ('ɛvə(r)), adv. Forms: a. 1–3 æfre (north. æfra, 2 ævre, 3 ævere), 2–3 afre, efre, efer(e, 3 aver(e, avre, eur, 2–4 evr(e, evere, 3–4 hevere, 2–5 eaver, 2–6 evir, -yr, 9 dial. ivver, 2– ever. β. 3 ær, er, 4–7 ere, 6– e'er. Also a. 3 3avre, 6 yeffor. β. 4 yer. [OE. æfre. Not found in other Teut. langs.; the ulterior etymology is doubtful. Connexion of some kind with OE. á, AY is probable on account of the sense.

If it be a compound of á, the second element should begin with f or less probably with b, and contain the vowel (i:). The most plausible suggestion hitherto made is that of Cosijn (Taalk. Bijdragen II. 267), that it is equivalent to Goth. aiw fairhwau* 'ever in life'; cf. the common OE. phrase á tó feore in similar sense; also OHG. neonaltre never, lit. 'never in life'. This is supported by the agreement of the final -a of the ONorthumb. æfra with the ending of the locative (dat.) of the -u declension, to which the sb. feorh life (:—ferhwus*) originally belonged. The recorded forms of feorh, however, do not account for the umlaut; but cf. the cognate OE. fíras, OS. firihôs, ON. fírar 'men'. A different suggestion has been made by Prof. G. Hempl in Mod. Lang. Notes IV. (1889) 417, viz. that the word is an adverbial case of a subst. compound f. á + byre (:—buri) event, occasion. On this view its formation would be closely analogous to that of Ger. jemals. With regard to the umlaut Prof. Hempl compares ærende:—árundi*; with regard to the f from b he compares wéofod for wíh-bed* (or -béod).]

The OE. ælc, ylc, was a compound of á, synonymous with æfre; but, owing to umlaut and contraction, the etymological force of the word had become obscured, and æfre was prefixed in order to express more distinctly the original sense. Although the phrase was always written in OE. (as sometimes in ME.) as two words, it had in 10th c. already come to be felt as a compound, and when it is governed by a prep. this is placed before the first of the two words. The forms marked α descend from æfre ælc, and the β forms, including the mod. every, from æfre ylc. It does not appear that æfre was prefixed to the other two words, æghwilc and gehwilc, which enter into the history of EACH.]

I. As adj. used attrib.

1. Used to express distributively the sense that is expressed collectively by all.

Originally this sense was expressed by each, from which every differed only in emphasizing the element of universality in the signification. Thus Wyclif writes 'euery langour and eche sekenesse,' it being unnecessary to repeat the emphasis. When every had ceased to be recognizable as a compound of each, the two words were at first often used somewhat indiscriminately, but their functions were gradually differentiated. In mod. usage, every directs attention chiefly to the totality, each chiefly to the individuals composing it. It may also be observed that each usually refers to a numerically definite group, in contrast to the indefinite universality expressed by every: thus 'Each theory is open to objection' relates to an understood enumeration of theories, but 'Every theory is open to objection' refers to all theories that may exist.

every one: see EVERY 10.

1. a. A combination of EVERY (sense 1) and THING. As in anything, something, nothing, the subst. element has usually no definable meaning, the compound being equivalent to a neuter absol. use of the adj. The distributive sense etymologically belonging to the word is often absent, its force being merely collective; hence it is the current substitute for all (absol.), all things, which in most contexts are now somewhat formal. Often followed by adj., as everything good = 'all that is good'. Formerly written as two words; this is now rare, exc. where the two words are used without modification of sense.

The form evel, whence the mod. form descends, appears in ME. first as west midland and Kentish, but in 15th c. had become general. The conditions under which early M.E. (i) or (y) became (e:), the antecedent of mod.Eng. (i:), are not clearly determined; the present word and weevil seem to be the only examples in which this change was other than local; obs. and dial. instances are yeve = 'give', leve = 'live', EASLE. (Other apparent examples are due to OE. forms with eo, resulting from u- or o- umlaut.)]

A. adj. The antithesis of GOOD in all its principal senses.

In OE., as in all the other early Teut. langs. exc. Scandinavian, this word is the most comprehensive adjectival expression of disapproval, dislike, or disparagement. In mod. colloquial Eng. it is little used, such currency as it has being due to literary influence. In quite familiar speech the adj. is commonly superseded by bad; the sb. is somewhat more frequent, but chiefly in the widest senses, the more specific senses being expressed by other words, as harm, injury, misfortune, disease, etc.
